It is of my opinion that the DOT drug testing regulations should remain the same other than the possibility of additional hair testing to detect a longer history of drug use for cocaine and amphetamines. Marijuana is not easily detected in hair and should be tested by means of urine as it shows a much longer history. Laboratories are able to test for adulterant's and dilute specimens in urine and it appears to be very effective.

POCT's would not be as accurate as laboratory testing and could be adulterated very easily, showing only what appeared to be a negative test, may not be urine at all.

Person(s) administrating the POCT's are not considered a third party to individuals being tested which could result in assisted negative results.
